WS 195 (CRN 16304) Flesh and Text: The Body in Literature (4 credits) (HU)
(Cross-listed with ENGL 195, CRN 15624)
How is the body written? How does it respond? This course will explore the relationship between bodies and language by considering the cultural and material implications of embodiment. We will read provocative texts that restyle conventional inscriptions and narratives of embodiment, investigating how writers express themselves as bodies as well as how bodies are marked and consumed. We will put primary texts in dialogue with a series of corresponding films and critical pieces as we move through three units: Gender and Embodiment, Consuming Bodies and Bodies in Trouble. In addition to reflecting on other bodies, we will think with and through our own, culminating in a body project at the conclusion of the course.
